“ To Steve & children,
So very sorry for your loss. May your treasured memories be forever held in your heart. What we have once enjoyed, we can never really lose because what we love deeply becomes part of us. Jenny was my friend and the maid of honor in my wedding in 1971, I will remember her and all the fun times we had together growing up. I read a book recently (The Stranger in the Lifeboat by Mitchell Albom). The character asks, “Why did God take my loved one?” The person asking this question is then told, “The better question would be, why did God give them to us? What did we do to deserve their love, their joy and the sweet moments we shared? Those moments are a gift, but their end is not a punishment. God is never cruel! He knew us before we were born and he knows us after we die. His plans for us are not defined by this world. Beginnings and endings are earthly ideas. God goes on, and because God goes on, we go on with Him. Feeling loss is part of why we are on earth. Through it you have the opportunity to appreciate the brief gift of human existence and you learn to cherish the world God created for you. The human form is not permanent, it was never meant to be, that gift belongs to the soul.” I wanted to share that with because I thought it was a beautiful explanation that brings me peace.
Blessings,
